What We Have Is So Much More

Ephesians 3:20-21

More Than Enough

In the hustle and bustle of life we forget who we belong to. However, God has a way of speaking to us through song in our contemporary world, if we listen with open hearts and minds. These songs will remind us who we belong to. These songs carry more than melody, they carry a revelation. When I hear the words from "Love Ballad" "What we have is so much more," my spirit hears more than romance, more than human longing. I hear a call to remember what it really means to belong to God. Because what we have in Him is more than survival, more than religion, more than ritual. It is covenant. It is relationship. It is the love of God poured out in Jesus Christ.

Too many of us live as if we are barely making it, just trying to hang on, holding on by a thread. But the message of the gospel and the echo of Revelation is this: what we have is so much more.

1. More Than the World Can Offer

Society whispers daily: You are not enough. You do not have enough. You must grasp, hustle, prove, perform. But covenant whispers louder: The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want.

What the world offers is temporary. Money fades, fame dissolves, power corrupts. But what we have in Christ cannot be purchased, cannot be taken, cannot be counterfeited. Revelation opens not with beasts and battles, but with a reminder: this is the revelation of Jesus Christ, given to His servants. That means you already possess something the world cannot match, vision, truth, presence.

What we have is not less real than the headlines or the markets, it is more real. Because it is eternal.

2. More Than Religion

Some think all we have is a book of rules, a set of rituals, a church calendar. But no, what we have is so much more.

Religion can give you habits; it can give you structures. But Covenant promises life and gives you life. Covenant gives you identity. Covenant gives you God's hesed, His steadfast love that does not let go.

When John saw the Son of Man walking among the lampstands in Revelation 1, he was not seeing cold religion. He was seeing relationship. He was seeing Christ present with His people, His hand upon His church, His voice like many waters speaking life.

3. More Than Fear

Let's be honest: many people approach Revelation with fear. They tremble at its beasts, its battles, its bowls of wrath. But the first word of this apocalypse is not doom, it is unveiling. And what is unveiled? Not terror, not chaos, not despair. But Jesus Christ.

Fear is our culture's greatest weapon. It keeps people compliant, it silences voices, it enslaves. But Revelation declares a greater reality: "Do not be afraid. I am the First and the Last. I was dead, but I am alive forevermore, and I hold the keys of death and Hades."

What we have is so much more than fear, it is hope. Hope that shines brighter than darkness. Hope that cannot be killed. Hope that walks among us even now.

4. More Than Survival

Too many believers live as if faith is just about making it through, as if salvation is an escape plan. But John's vision shows us something else: Jesus is not just saving us from; He is saving us for.

He is saving us for witness, for faithfulness, for victory, for participation in His kingdom that is breaking in even now.

The seven churches were not told, "Just hang on until it's over." They were told, "Be faithful. Remember your first love. Hold fast. Overcome." That's not survival language. That's covenant language. That's more-than-enough language.

5. More Than Death

Society's final weapon is death. That's what the world uses against us. That's what our culture wields in every age. Threaten life, take life, and people will fall in line.

But Revelation announces something astonishing: the Lamb who was slain is alive. Death did its worst and lost. The grave could not hold Him. The keys of death and Hades are now in His hand.

What we have is not a fragile hope that crumbles at the grave. What we have is resurrection power. A covenant promise that even when we die, we shall live. A kingdom where even death becomes doorway, not ending.

6. More Than We Imagined

Here's the truth: if all God gave us was forgiveness, that would be enough. If all He gave us was daily bread, that would be enough. If all He gave us was His Spirit's comfort, that would be enough. But He has given us more. So much more.

He has given us Himself. His presence. His Spirit. His promises. His kingdom. He has given us His hesed, His qadosh, His berith.

Paul says it like this: "Now to Him who is able to do exceedingly abundantly above all that we ask or think…" That's covenant reality. That's Revelation reality.

Conclusion: Live Like You Have More

So let the song linger. Let the Spirit whisper: What we have is so much more.

Don't live like a beggar when you are an heir. Don't live like a servant when you are a son or daughter. Don't live like a victim when you already share in the victory of the Lamb.

What we have is more than the world can offer, more than religion, more than fear, more than survival, more than death. It is more than we imagined.

So lift your head. Walk in covenant promise. Stand among the lampstands. And remember, Revelation does not begin with beasts or battles. It begins with Jesus, unveiled.

And that is more than enough.

Blessings,

Pastor Gool
